

Paradise Lost, A Tercentenary Tribute: Papers Given At The Conference On The Tercentenary Of Paradis

Notes on Paradise Lost

Paradise Lost is perhaps the greatest poem in English literature. Drawing on the ancient, classical epics of Homer (The Odyssey) and especially Virgil (the Aeneid), Milton composed the only great epic in the English tradition. Since his time, no poet has approached the magnitude of the literary scope found in PL; indeed, because of Milton's poem, critics agree that no English poet will ever be able to write another epic and find critical or popular acclaim.

In the period immediately following the publication of PL and Milton's death, he was proclaimed by his own age as one of the three greatest English poets (along with Chaucer and Shakespeare). However, since then and especially in the twentieth century he has come under severe attack. There are actually two distinct schools of Miltonic criticism: the Miltonists and the anti-Miltonists. In Douglas Bush's Paradise Lost in Our Time and several chapters in The Cambridge Companion to Milton a rather detailed discussion of these two critical schools and why they feel the way they do can be found.

In brief, the anti-Miltonists criticize Milton for:

1. Arrogant self-confidence.
2. Religious and spiritual self-righteousness.
3. Idealism (as opposed to realism).
4. Orthodoxy (he is "a monument to dead ideas").
5. The dissociation of thought and feeling in poetry.
6. The lack of visual imagination.
7. Vague, artificial, conventional language.
8. Generalized versus particularized imagery.

Miltonists, on the other hand, defend him for:

1. Representing a tradition of poetry with a voice of heroic magnitude proclaiming that good is good and evil is evil.
2. Representing humankind as religious and moral beings in a religious and moral universe that has order.
3. Stating clearly that the destiny of humankind depends upon the individual soul.
4. Affirming that right reason should control human passion.
